Introducing an ally

National Centre for First Nations Governance (NCFNG)

The National Centre for First Nations Governance (NCFNG) is an innovative service and research organization offering an important set of nation re-building services to First Nations from the Atlantic to the Pacific. NCFNG provides a bridge between traditional and contemporary governance models. Services are developed and delivered by experienced and educated Aboriginal staff.

Mission

We support First Nations by providing relevant and innovative knowledge and development of governance services, products and events.

Call for paper

2010 Annual Meeting of the American Society for Ethnohistory, Ottawa, Ontario, Canada, Lord Elgin Hotel, October 13 - 17, 2010 Call for Papers / Submissions

Please note the early deadline for abstract submissions–April 15, 2010

Creating Nations and Building States: Past and Present

The theme for the ASE Ottawa 2010 is titled 'Creating Nations and Building States: Past and Present,' focusing on indigenous societies and their relations with expanding colonial and modern state structures of Canada, America, and Latin America. This general theme is intended to initiate discussions on the complex and often fractious relations between Native societies and expanding state structures in the Americas from contact onward.

Papers on instances of ethnogenesis, persistence and transformation of identity, culture and social structures over time are especially welcomed. Since the meeting is being held in Canada's capital during the 125th anniversary of the second Métis provisional government and resistance movement at Batoche, we encourage discussions and reflection on alternative models of indigenous nation building, displacement and violence in the interior, and the vast process of native exclusion in the construction of modern states.
